The use and abuse of drugs and alcohol is a serious issue that you shouldn't ignore when you notice it among your loved ones. If left unchecked the abuse of drugs and alcohol can lead to drug addiction and alcoholism. It is always important to recognize the signs of drug and alcohol addiction early so that you help your loved one regain control over their lives. However, signs and symptoms of drug and alcohol addiction may vary from one individual to another. In the case of drug addiction, symptoms will vary depending on the substances that the individual is using.

Signs of Drug Addiction

Drug addiction may refer to the physical and psychological need to continue using a particular substance despite its harmful effects on your body. Sometimes, these signs may fail to appear, but that doesn't mean that the substance is safe for your body.

- Cravings: Victims may experience intense cravings for particular drug substances as their addiction develops.

- Intensive drug seeking: You or your loved may spend significant amounts of time and energy trying to find specific drugs of their choice
- Poor judgment: Individuals will do anything, including risky behaviors such as lying, stealing, and engaging in unsafe sexual activities to obtain drugs and satisfy their intense desires.
- Physical dependence: Victims will also develop a physical dependence on certain drug substances. The psychological effect associated with physical dependency on drugs will leave the addict feeling bad when the drug is no longer in their system.
- Isolation: Some patients will also withdraw and isolate themselves while trying to hide the drugs from their close friends and family members. Some of the top reasons for isolation include fear of stigma, anxiety, or increased depression.

Signs and Symptoms of Alcohol Addiction

Just like drug addiction, alcohol addiction refers to the physical and psychological dependence to alcohol. People who suffer from alcoholism may build-up tolerance to alcohol and even ignore the alcohol-related problems in their lives. Individuals who suffer from alcohol addiction tend to exhibit different symptoms. The signs displayed by an individual will largely depend on the individual's background and medical history. Here are some of the common signs and symptoms that indicate alcohol addiction.

- Loss of interest in work or school
- Depression
- Restlessness
- Inability to control alcohol drinking
- Violent behavior
- Lack of interest in friends and family members
- Erratic behavior
